

Prayer Forms in Judaism

There are many forms of prayer in Judaism, because Jews approach God in many moods. Some of the common types of prayer are mentioned below.

Match the correct word to the statements below.

affirmation

protest

resignation

penitence

contemplation

petition

adoration

thanksgiving

quest

in which, having experienced God's goodness, man puts into words his gratitude and indebtedness.

which crystallises the faith of the believer and his aspirations.

wherein the guilty conscience confesses its guilt and appeals for purification from it.

which involves the pouring forth of human indignation against the injustices of the world and the voiced demand that they be set right.

in which the heart's desires are asked for, whether they be things physical or spiritual, whether for self or for others.

in which, his own devices and strength exhausted, man casts his burdens on the Lord.

in which, lost and confused, man gropes for light and direction, sometimes for the very God to whom he addresses his supplications.

in which man meditates on God and His will.

in which the greatness and mystery of God are considered.

Solutions to Worksheet OR-J111: Prayer Forms in Judaism

The Prayer
of:

contemplation	in which man meditates on God and His will.
adoration	in which the greatness and mystery of God are considered.
thanksgiving	in which, having experienced God's goodness, man puts into words his gratitude and indebtedness.
affirmation	which crystallises the faith of the believer and his aspirations.
resignation	in which, his own devices and strength exhausted, man casts his burdens on the Lord.
penitence	wherein the guilty conscience confesses its guilt and appeals for purification from it.
protest	which involves the pouring forth of human indignation against the injustices of the world and the voiced demand that they be set right.
quest	in which, lost and confused, man gropes for light and direction, sometimes for the very God to whom he addresses his supplications.
petition	in which the heart's desires are asked for, whether they be things physical or spiritual, whether for self or for others.